Society Notes

The Horn Reunion At Grove Church

The Horn family held its eighth annual reunion on Aug. 27, at the Grove church, Harrison township, Knox County.

The day was an ideal one for the occasion; the dust having been laid, and the heat moderated by the timely rain, and the relatives and friends of the family turned out en-masse; and by ten o'clock the beautiful grounds about the church were filled with a crowd bent on having a good time.

The forenoon was spent in hand-shaking and renewing old acquaintances, and having a good time generally. The family having formed the habit of eating at picnics, the tables in the grove were therefore loaded with good things for that purpose commensurate with appetites thus attained. And it was a caution how they got outside of that table-load of food. In the afternoon the crowd assembled in the church, the meeting being presided over by Pres. pro tem Chas. Horn, of Gambler, who made a short address.

The minutes of the previous meeting were then read by the secretary, and approved.

The following program was then rendered:

Address—Mr. Ray Earlywine, Bladenburg, Ohio.

KING EDWARD'S BOOKSHELF
A writer in the London Sketch has an article entitled "The Bookshelf of Two Kings," the gist of which is that neither Edward VII. nor his successor has had a very strong interest in literature, says the Bookman. Novels, it is true, engaged a certain portion of King Edward's time, and Marie Corelli's fiction is popularly associated with the book-shelf of the royal residences. It is less generally known that Edward perused the more knotted pages of George Meredith. Before the master novelist had reached the height of his repute the King had read "The Egoist," and had expressed a desire to meet the author. Thackeray and Dickens, according to the writer, were known personally to King Edward and the list of his literary friends was exceedingly long.

HERRICK A CLASSICIST

A review of a book on Robert Herrick in the London Outlook says: Dr. Moorman considered the poetry of Herrick in every aspect, and in reviews, brief in form and full of matter, sets out his relation to the poetic movements of his day. He does not lump Jacobean and Caroline under the convenient term of Elizabethan, and he knows that when the spirit of art is quickened, its progress is not to be measured by time only. The analysis of the forms of the lyric during the English renaissance is more exact than any we have ever met before. The insistence on Jonson's direction of English poetry into classic molds is merited, though some reference might have been made to the price which England and France paid for their classicism. It brought conventionality, the worst disease of literature, Herrick's excessive classicism—he is saturated with it—has made the bulk of his poetry distasteful to the nominally educated, and unintelligible to the people who have not had a smattering of Greek and Latin to forget. Of course with Herrick it was inevitable and part of the literary mode of Europe. It is interesting to notice how similar its effects sometimes were. Contrasting "Corinna's going a-Maying" with the sonnet "Marie, levez-vous," (Marie, arise!) of the classic Ronsard, we have a fine instance of differing inspiration. With Dr. Moorman's help it would be pleasant to taste all the variety of Herrick, and ultimately to arrive at his right place in our literature. Here there is room only to draw attention to the fact that Herrick was an artist not only in metres but in languages, that he fashioned his poems over and over again, and that he had the fine sensitiveness to words without which the literary artist is not possible.

While the people cling to most of their foolish notions, it may be said that the Fats and Leans are not playing baseball as often as they did in days gone by.

PLAN

For New Jury System For The Court

Common Pleas Judge Edwin Mansfield is about to attempt to inaugurate a new jury system to some extent, says the Mansfield News. Heretofore considerable trouble has been experienced to secure suitable jurymen when the regular panel has been exhausted. Of course it is always possible to send out around town and pick up men for duty on the jury but not always are the right kind of men found by such methods. Judge Mansfield has decided to send letters to all the manufacturing plants and places of business in the city and request that the names of men who would be available for special duty be sent in. The judge thinks that each concern could send in the name of at least one man who would be ready to respond for jury duty when needed. In this way good, competent juries could be secured in a hurry. When the response to Judge Mansfield's letter come into the court house a list will be made up and kept handy for the future. Judge Mansfield says that it costs the county too much to keep a sufficient number of jurymen regularly drawn and summoned for the use in case the panel is exhausted, they being entitled to $2 per day while on call. By the system which the judge proposes to try not only would good, competent jurymen be secured but they would be within reach when needed without any expense unless they are actually used for jury service. Such jurymen would only be required to serve on one case during each year. The court thinks the experiment is at least worth
